Understanding Christ's nature is essential to understanding God's nature.

What is Christ's nature?

How is that possible?

Why does it matter?

"Of course none of the clues we have been looking for actually proves God. Every one of them is rationally avoidable. However, their cumulative effect is, I think, provocative and potent. Though the secular view of the world is rationally possible, it doesn't make as much sense of all these things as the view that God exists. That's why we call them clues."
